The Heart Hospital of Queens

Emmanuel N. Moustakakis, M.D., has been named Director, Coronary Care Unit at New York Hospital Queens by Chong H. Park, M.D., Director, Division of Cardiology.

Dr. Moustakakis, an interventional cardiologist, has completed fellowships in interventional cardiology and cardiovascular medicine at North Shore University Hospital/Long Island Jewish Health System in Manhasset. In addition to coronary and peripheral interventions, he completed additional training in percutaneous atrial septal occluder placement. He is board-certified in cardiovascular diseases and nuclear cardiology.

He will be responsible for directing the hospital's 13-bed Coronary Care Unit (CCU) for patients with the most serious and acute cardiac illnesses such as heart attacks, unstable heart rhythms or acute heart failure. In the CCU, a team of specialized nurses and physician assistants trained in the monitoring and management of cardiac patients work closely with clinical and interventional cardiologists, house staff, and technicians to bring the highest level of care to the most severely ill patients. A full complement of hemodynamic, arrhythmia, respiratory monitoring and related support devices are available in the CCU to provide physicians and nurses with the information necessary to optimize patient care.

Dr. Moustakakis was a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of the University of Texas at Austin and received his medical degree from the University of Texas – Houston Medical School. He completed his internship and residency at New York University School of Medicine/Bellevue Hospital Center.
